

Shared branching

Everence Federal Credit Union

Through our membership in the CO-OP Network, you can do business with Everence Federal Credit Union at nearly 5,000 credit union branches nationwide!

How it works

Go into the office of any credit union displaying the Credit Union Service Center network logo (left), and you can make deposits, withdrawals, transfers or loan payments to your Everence Federal Credit Union account.

A shared branch is not an ATM, but a fully staffed office where you can conduct Everence Federal Credit Union business with real people.

The Credit Union Service Center shared branch network is perfect for EFCU members who:

- Do not live near one of our offices
- Travel for business or vacation
- Are moving to a new community

When visiting a shared service branch, all you do is provide the teller with the name of your credit union – Everence Federal Credit Union – your account number as it appears on your account statement, and a photo ID. The member service representative will be linked automatically to your account at Everence Federal Credit Union. Please note that deposits cannot be left in a night deposit box. All deposits must be made in person so member identification can be confirmed. Shared service branches may charge members a fee for some services. Check the member fee schedule on display or check with staff at the branch to see if fees apply. Please also remember that shared branches may be limited in the transactions they can perform.
